Proposal for Xoops.org: New management structure

My proposal is based on the successful example of www.xoops.net.br. They use an annual rotation system for the website administrator. This allows them to continually inject fresh ideas and captivate new members into their teams. For people who are unfamiliar with this support site, let me elaborate a bit more on their success story.

They started out as any other standard support site, with some members and a lot of good faith. Through various innovative concepts they quickly gained members and started to build a community that transcended their own language barrier. They have even been able to develop their own modules based on member donations. Their experience could be used in implementing a similar system here at xoops.org

So my proposal is: Herko would still lead the XOOPS foundation but the xoops.org site would have an annual (or biannual, the time frame would of course be decided by the community) administrator that could be either; a) elected by the community or b) appointed by a core team.

This of course is only an initial proposal but one I feel confident would bring many benefits to the xoops.org site.
